What's on this page? How does weight loss help prediabetes? How much weight should I lose? What's the best way to lose weight? Can exercise help me lose weight? Getting support to lose weight Resources to help you with weight loss How does weight loss help prediabetes? If you're carrying extra weight, losing just a few pounds can help you reduce your risk of type 2 diabetes and help you manage prediabetes or even reverse prediabetes . That's because losing weight can help reduce levels of hidden fat in the liver and pancreas. This can get these organs working properly again and to manage your blood sugar levels, to help them return to a normal range. How much weight should I lose? We know it can be very difficult to lose weight. If you're living with overweight or obesity, even small amounts of weight loss – between 1% to 9% of your body weight can help insulin work better to manage blood sugar levels. Example: If you're 75kg (just under 12 stone) a weight loss of between 1% and 9% of your body weight is between 0.75kg (one and a half pounds) and 6.75kg (around one stone). Getting the right support can help you lose weight. If you've been a healthy weight and have gained weight as you've got older, even if your Body Mass Index, or BMI , is still within a healthy weight range it may be heavier than is healthy for you, and this can cause your blood sugar levels to rise. So you may want to lose these extra pounds. If your BMI is in the underweight category, losing more weight is not safe and will not help you manage prediabetes or prevent type 2 diabetes. It is important you speak to your GP as you may be malnourished . They will be able to examine the underlying cause and provide any necessary treatment and support. What's the best way to lose weight? There is no set way to lose weight. We know the most effective diet is a safe diet that you can stick to. It is much easier to lose weight if you have the ri
